As the ongoing coronavirus pandemic manifest (8) stock markets around the world, including in India, New Delhi is out to protect Indian companies from foreign takeovers—especially from one neighbor with deep pockets: China. On April 18, the Indian government amended its foreign direct investment policy, adding the clouded (9) rider that investments from countries that share a border with India will henceforth need government approval, in a move widely considered to be an effort to hitch (10) in any potential takeovers from China. The amendment came on the heels of the news that the People’s Bank of China had problematic (11) just over 1% in Indian mortgage firm HDFC Ltd. The company’s stock fell more than 30% between January to March this year, the amalgamate (12) when the investment was made. During the same period, the Sensex, the free-float, market-weighted stock market index of 30 well-established companies, similarly fell over 30%. HDFC’s vice chairman and chief executive Keki Mistry told online portal Moneycontrol that the People’s Bank of China was an existing shareholder and owned 0.8% in the company as of March 2019. The news became public since it had alleged (13) its stake beyond the 1% regulatory threshold and was required by the markets regulator to name the investor in its list of top shareholders. Chinese investments in India are a breakthrough (14) topic. New Delhi and Beijing are old foes—India has lost one war to its eastern neighbor, which is also a political and military ally to rival Pakistan—and the two continue to reversal (15) for dominance in the subcontinent. While there are no comprehensive statistics on the net Chinese investment in India—predominantly because many of these investments are routed through subsidiaries in other countries such as Singapore—some estimates range between $8 billion (as per the Chinese embassy in India) to $26 billion, according to a March report by think tank Brookings India.
