More than half of the country's working population is battling stress, with more women than men affected by it. Findings of a health and well-being survey carried out by Cigna TTK Health Insurance shows that about 62% of employees display some physical symptoms of stress such as difficulty in falling asleep at night or emotive symptoms, such as not remembering when they are happy. People living in metropolitan cities and those working for more than 50 hours a week were found to be the most stressed. Employees in non-metro cities were found to be happier than those in metro cities, the survey found. The online survey was carried out with 3,021 respondents in India to understand their health and well-being. It was conducted in September 2015 and covered New Delhi, Mumbai, Bangalore, Kolkata and Chennai among metro cities and Lucknow, Vizag, Ahmedabad, Pune and Surat among non-metros.

The survey was conducted to check overall health and well-being of people, both men and women, aged over 25. What it also found was that while 37% of Indians are obese, 85% of the people surveyed said they followed a healthy diet comprising fresh home-cooked food. Most reported consuming only low quantities of alcohol. The survey's respondents also reported exercising an average of 2.6 hours per week. Five per cent of the total number of people surveyed said they did not exercise at all. And 13% of the obese respondents said they did not exercise.

Directions (26-30): Read the passage carefully and choose the best answer to each question out of the four alternatives.

The strength of Indian democracy lies in its tradition, in the fusion of the ideas of democracy and national independence which was the characteristic of the Indian Nationalist Movement long before independence. Although the British retained supreme authority in India until 1947, the provincial elections of 1937 provided real exercise in democratic practice to Indians before national independence. During the Pacific war, India was not overrun or seriously invaded by the Japanese and after the war was over, the transfer of power to a government of the Indian Congress Party was a peaceful one as far as Britain was concerned. By 1947, 'Indianisation' has already gone far in the Indian Civil Service and Army, so that the new government could start with effective instruments of central control.

After independence, however, India was faced with two vast problems: The first, that of economic growth from a very low level of production, and the second was that of ethnic diversity and the aspirations of sub-nationalities. The Congress leadership was more aware of the former problem than of the second. As a new political elite which had rebelled not only against the British Raj but also against India's old social order, the leaders were conscious of the need to initiate economic development and undertake social reforms. But as nationalists who had led a struggle against the alien rule on behalf of all parts of India, they took the cohesion of the Indian nation too much for granted and underestimated the centrifugal forces of ethnic division, which were bound to be accentuated rather than diminished as the popular masses were more and more drawn into politics. The Congress party was originally opposed to the idea of recognising any division of India on a linguistic basis and preferred to retain the old provinces of British India which often cut across linguistic boundaries. However, this was later conceded as the basis for a federal 'Indian Union'. The rights granted to the states created new problems for the central government. The idea of making Hindi the national language of a united India was thwarted by the recalcitrance of the speakers of other important Indian languages and the autonomy of the states rendered central economic planning extremely difficult. Land reforms remained under the control of the states and many large-scale economic projects required a degree of cooperation between the central government and one or more of the states which, it was found, was impossible to achieve. Coordination of policies was difficult even when the Congress party was in power both in the states and at the centre. When a Congress Government in Delhi was confronted with non-Congress parties in office in the states, it became much harder.

Q26. Which of the following problems was India faced with after Independence?

- (a) Military attack from a country across the border
- (b) Lack of coordination between the central and state governments
- (c) Improper coordination of various government policies
- (d) Increasing the production from a very low level

Q27. Which of the following issues was not appropriately realized by the central government?

- (a) Ethnic diversity of the people
- (b) A national language for the country
- (c) Implementation of the formulated policies
- (d) Centre-state relations

Q28. Why central economic planning was found to be difficult?

- (a) There was a multiplicity of states and union territories
- (b) There was lack of coordination in different government departments
- (c) Autonomy was given to the states in certain matters
- (d) There was lack of will in implementing land reforms

Q29. Why was the linguistic reorganization of the states accepted?

- (a) The states were not cooperating with the central government
- (b) Non-Congress governments in the states demanded such a reorganization of the states
- (c) No common national language emerged
- (d) Strong pressure was exerted by the states on the central government to create such states.

Q30. Which, according to the passage, can be cited as an exercise in democratic practice in India before Independence?

- (a) The handing over of power by the British of India
- (b) Provincial election of 1937
- (c) A neutral role played by the Army
- (d) None of the above
